

Shyanne Robinson

Mr. Salow

English 11

1 May 2017

Year-Round Schooling

A Research Paper Proposal

I propose a research paper on the idea of year-round schooling schedule. This subject is highly debated in education, so there is likely to be a lot of bias. The purpose of this research project is to analyze ways that authors of different articles try to persuade their readers to take their side. The importance of this topic is so people can read articles and identify the bias, so they can read without forced bias. Knowing what is biased in a paper or article helps the reader know when they are trying to be persuaded on a certain topic. When the audience of an article can read and identify bias, then they can formulate a genuine thought or opinion about the topic that is being written about.

I plan to research the listed articles and identify the bias that is intricately weaved in each piece. By doing this research, I can display how bias finds it's way into educational articles. I can also show how to find bias in an article. Bias can be found in almost every article that is on the internet, or in newspapers. Identifying where the bias is in the article, however; is the tricky part.

It is important to know when you are being influenced by bias, so that you can be level headed and not have your emotions played with by an author who knows how to appeal to pathos.

Bibliography

Zubrzycki, Jaclyn. Year-Round Schooling Explained. 2015.

<http://www.edweek.org>

Yeager, Fred. Year-Round Education Program Guide, 2016.

<http://www.cde.ca.gov>

Anthony, Katie. Disadvantages Of the Year-Round School Calendar On Maternal Employment.

2013

<http://chicagopolicyreview.org>

Hornak, David. Calendars: Traditional vs. Modified. 2015

<http://www.nayre.org/calendars.html>

Lynch, Matthew. Year-Round Schooling: How it Affects Students. 2014

<http://www.huffingtonpost.com>

McMullen, Steven and Rouse, Kathryn. The Impact of Year-Round Schooling on Academic Achievement: Evidence From Mandatory School Calendar Conversations. 2011

<http://www.elon.edu>